Defendant.)

Pending before the Court is Plaintiff Rebecca Dixie Salcido's appeal from the Social Security Administration's final decision to deny her claim for disability insurance benefits and supplemental security income. After reviewing the administrative record and the arguments of the parties, the Court now issues the following ruling.

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiff filed applications for disability insurance benefits and supplemental security income in May 2010, alleging disability beginning February 1, 2010. (Transcript of Administrative Record ("Tr.") at 26, 273-81.) Her applications were denied initially and on reconsideration. (Tr. at 181-84, 189-95.) Thereafter, Plaintiff requested a hearing before an administrative law judge. (Tr. at 196.) A hearing was held on November 16, 2011. (Tr. at 43-95.) The record was left open and a subsequent hearing was held on March 27, 2012. (Tr. at 96-128.) On April 9, 2012, the ALJ issued a decision finding that Plaintiff was not disabled. (Tr. at 23-42.) The Appeals Council denied Plaintiff's request for review (Tr. at 1 1-6), making the ALJ's decision the final decision of the Commissioner. Plaintiff then 2 sought judicial review of the ALJ's decision pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 405(g).

3 II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

4 The Court must affirm the ALJ's findings if the findings are supported by substantial 5 evidence and are free from reversible legal error. See Reddick v. Chater, 157 F.3d 715, 720
 6 (9th Cir. 1998); Marcia v. Sullivan, 900 F.2d 172, 174 (9th Cir. 1990). Substantial evidence 7 means "more than a mere scintilla" and "such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might 8 accept as adequate to support a conclusion." Richardson v. Perales, 402 U.S. 389, 401 9 (1971); see Reddick, 157 F.3d at 720.

10 In determining whether substantial evidence supports a decision, the Court considers 11 the administrative record as a whole, weighing both the evidence that supports and the 12 evidence that detracts from the ALJ's conclusion. See Reddick, 157 F.3d at 720. "The ALJ 13 is responsible for determining credibility, resolving conflicts in medical testimony, and for 14 resolving ambiguities." Andrews v. Shalala, 53 F.3d 1035, 1039 (9th Cir. 1995); see 15 Magallanes v. Bowen, 881 F.2d 747, 750 (9th Cir. 1989). "If the evidence can reasonably 16 support either affirming or reversing the [Commissioner's] conclusion, the court may not 17 substitute its judgment for that of the [Commissioner]." Reddick, 157 F.3d at 720-21.

18 III. THE ALJ'S FINDINGS

19 In order to be eligible for disability or social security benefits, a claimant must 20 demonstrate an "inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of any 21 medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in 22 death or which has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of not less than 23 12 months." 42 U.S.C. § 423(d)(1)(A). An ALJ determines a claimant's eligibility for 24 benefits by following a five-step sequential evaluation:

- 25 (1) determine whether the applicant is engaged in "substantial gainful activity";
- 26 (2) determine whether the applicant has a medically severe impairment or
- 27 combination of impairments;

1 (3) determine whether the applicant's impairment equals one of a number of listed 2 impairments that the Commissioner acknowledges as so severe as to preclude the applicant from engaging in substantial gainful activity;

3 (4) if the applicant's impairment does not equal one of the listed impairments, 4 determine whether the applicant is capable of performing his or her past relevant work;

5 (5) if the applicant is not capable of performing his or her past relevant work, 6 determine whether the applicant is able to perform other work in the national economy in view of his age, education, and work experience.

7 See Bowen v. Yuckert, 482 U.S. 137, 140-42 (1987) (citing 20 C.F.R. §§ 404.1520, 8 416.920). At the fifth stage, the burden of proof shifts to the Commissioner to show that the 9 claimant can perform other substantial gainful work. See Penny v. Sullivan, 2 F.3d 953, 956 10 (9th Cir. 1993).

11 At step one, the ALJ determined that Plaintiff had not engaged in substantial gainful 12 activity since February 1, 2010 – the alleged onset date. (Tr. at 28.) At step two, he found 13 that Plaintiff had the following severe impairments: chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, 14 pulmonary embolism, blood clots, diabetes mellitus, gastroesophageal reflux disease, sleep 15 apnea, hypertension, obesity, post right knee surgery (5/10), arthritis, low back pain, and 16 carpal tunnel syndrome (right). (Tr. at 28-30.) At step three, the ALJ stated that Plaintiff did 17 not have an impairment or combination of impairments that met or medically equaled an 18 impairment listed in 20 C.F.R. Part 404, Subpart P, Appendix 1 of the Commissioner's 19 regulations. (Tr. at 30.) After consideration of the entire record, the ALJ found that Plaintiff 20 retained "the residual functional capacity to perform sedentary work as defined in 20 CFR 21 404.1567(a) and 416.967(a) with the following limitations: must be allowed to sit or stand 22 alternatively at will provided she is not off task more than 10% of the work period; can never 23 climb ladders, ropes, or scaffolds; can occasionally climb ramps or stairs, balance, stoop, 24 crouch, kneel, and crawl; can frequently handle objects, that is, gross manipulation with the 25 right; can frequently finger, that is, fine manipulation of items no smaller than the size of a 26 paper clip with the right; can frequently feel with the right; must avoid moderate exposure 27 to excessive noise, irritants such as fumes, odors, dust, and gases, chemicals, use of moving 28

1 machinery, and exposure to unprotected heights.”¹ (Tr. at 30-34.) The ALJ determined that 2 Plaintiff is unable to perform any past relevant work, but that considering Plaintiff’s age, 3 education, work experience, and residual functional capacity, there are jobs that exist in 4 significant numbers in the national economy that Plaintiff can perform. (Tr. at 34-36.)

5 Therefore, the ALJ concluded that Plaintiff “has not been under a disability ... from 6 February 1, 2010, through the date of [his] decision.” (Tr. at 36.)

7 IV. DISCUSSION

8 In her brief, Plaintiff contends that the ALJ erred by: (1) failing to properly weigh 9 medical source opinion evidence; and (2) failing to properly consider her subjective 10 complaints. Plaintiff requests that the Court remand for determination of benefits.

11 A. Medical Source Opinion Evidence

12 Plaintiff contends that the ALJ erred by failing to properly weigh medical source 13 opinion evidence related to her physical impairments. Specifically, Plaintiff argues that the 14 ALJ improperly rejected the opinion of treating physician Sunil K. Jain, M.D., relying 15 instead upon the report of consultative examiner Elizabeth Ottney, D.O., and opinions of the 16 state agency physicians.

17 “The ALJ is responsible for resolving conflicts in the medical record.” Carmickle v.
 18 Comm’r, Soc. Sec. Admin., 533 F.3d at 1164. Such conflicts may arise between a treating 19 physician’s medical opinion and other evidence in the claimant’s record. In weighing 20 medical source opinions in Social Security cases, the Ninth Circuit distinguishes among three 21 types of physicians: (1) treating physicians, who actually treat the claimant; (2) examining 22 physicians, who examine but do not treat the claimant; and (3) non-examining physicians, 23 who neither treat nor examine the claimant. See Lester v. Chater, 81 F.3d 821, 830 (9th Cir.
 24 1995). The Ninth Circuit has held that a treating physician’s opinion is entitled to 25 “substantial weight.” Bray v. Comm’r, Soc. Sec. Admin., 554 F.3d 1219, 1228 (9th Cir.

26
 27 ¹ “Residual functional capacity” is defined as the most a claimant can do after 28 considering the effects of physical and/or mental limitations that affect the ability to perform work-related tasks.

2009) (quoting Embrey v. Bowen, 849 F.2d 418, 422 (9th Cir. 1988)). A treating physician's opinion is given controlling weight when it is "well-supported by medically accepted clinical and laboratory diagnostic techniques and is not inconsistent with the other substantial evidence in [the claimant's] case record." 20 C.F.R. § 404.1527(d)(2). On the other hand, if a treating physician's opinion "is not well-supported" or "is inconsistent with other substantial evidence in the record," then it should not be given controlling weight. Orn v. Astrue, 495 F.3d 624, 631 (9th Cir. 2007).

If a treating physician's opinion is not contradicted by the opinion of another physician, then the ALJ may discount the treating physician's opinion only for "clear and convincing" reasons. See Carmickle, 533 F.3d at 1164 (quoting Lester, 81 F.3d at 830). If a treating physician's opinion is contradicted by another physician's opinion, then the ALJ may reject the treating physician's opinion if there are "specific and legitimate reasons that are supported by substantial evidence in the record." Id. (quoting Lester, 81 F.3d at 830).

Since the opinion of Dr. Jain was contradicted by consultative examiner Dr. Ottney; state agency physicians D. Rowse, M.D. and Marilyn Orenstein, M.D.; as well as, other objective medical evidence, the specific and legitimate standard applies.

Historically, the courts have recognized the following as specific, legitimate reasons for disregarding a treating or examining physician's opinion: conflicting medical evidence; the absence of regular medical treatment during the alleged period of disability; the lack of medical support for doctors' reports based substantially on a claimant's subjective complaints of pain; and medical opinions that are brief, conclusory, and inadequately supported by medical evidence. See, e.g., Bayliss v. Barnhart, 427 F.3d 1211, 1216 (9th Cir. 2005); Flaten v. Secretary of Health and Human Servs., 44 F.3d 1453, 1463-64 (9th Cir. 1995); Fair v. Bowen, 885 F.2d 597, 604 (9th Cir. 1989).

The ALJ considered the following objective medical evidence of Plaintiff's physical impairments in his determination of Plaintiff's residual functional capacity assessment.

In July 2010, Dr. Ottney examined Plaintiff. (Tr. at 545-51.) Plaintiff reported a history of obstructive pulmonary disease; a recent pulmonary embolism related to right knee

1 surgery; and low back pain, as well as, insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus without 2 significant complications. She also reported “perform[ing] childcare duties,” and 3 examination revealed limited lumbar spine ranges of motion, but also essentially normal 4 respiratory functioning and effort with only slight dyspnea with exertion; normal extremity 5 strength throughout, including grip strength; the absence of lower extremity instability or 6 atrophy; normal balance; and the ability to ambulate without assistance. Right knee x-rays 7 revealed findings compatible with degenerative arthropathy. Dr. Ottney concluded that 8 Plaintiff could lift and/or carry 20 pounds occasionally and 10 pounds frequently; stand 9 and/or walk two hours; sit without restriction; climb ramps/stairs occasionally; and perform 10 work allowing limitations in exposure to heights, moving machinery, chemicals, and 11 dust/fumes or gases, and not requiring climbing ladders/ropes/scaffolds. (Tr. at 545-51).

12 Shortly thereafter, after having reviewed the objective medical evidence of record, 13 state agency reviewing physicians, Drs. Rowse and Orienstein, concluded that Plaintiff 14 retained the physical residual functional capacity to lift and/or carry 20 pounds occasionally 15 and 10 pounds frequently; stand and/or walk four hours and sit about six hours in an 16 eight-hour day; push/pull within her lifting capacity; climb ramps/stairs, balance, stoop, 17 kneel, and crouch occasionally; and perform work allowing avoidance of even moderate 18 exposure to fumes, odors, dusts, gases, poor ventilation, or hazards such as machinery or 19 heights, and any crawling or climbing of ladders/ropes/scaffolds; and that she had no visual, 20 manipulative, or other environmental limitations. (Tr. at 139-42, 150-53, 162-65, 175-78.)

21 Dr. Jain examined Plaintiff in March 2011 for complaints of neck and lower back 22 pain. (Tr. at 796-97.) Plaintiff denied chest pain, yet examination revealed decreased ranges 23 of motion of the cervical and lumbar portions of the spine. Dr. Jain recommended continued 24 current treatment. (Tr. at 796-97.) In March 2012, Dr. Jain treated Plaintiff with oral 25 medication and upper and lower spinal medication injections with similar examination 26 findings and reports by Plaintiff. (Tr. at 763-95, 871-82, 884-88.) He also performed upper 27 extremity electrodiagnostic studies revealing evidence consistent with chronic, moderate 28 carpal tunnel syndrome; and lower extremity electrodiagnostic studies revealing evidence

1 consistent with motor sensory polyneuropathy. Further, he obtained a cervical spine MRI 2 revealing a stable cervical spine and cord without convincing evidence of significant cord 3 abnormality, with mild disc bulging at multiple levels without central spinal canal or neural 4 foraminal stenosis, (Tr. at 750-51), and an abdominal CT scan revealed, among other 5 findings, normal lung bases, and a mild to moderate lumbar spine abnormalities without 6 destructive lesions (Tr. at 748-49). Plaintiff reported traveling out of state to visit her ill 7 father, with increased neck pain, and noted a cervical spine medication injection had helped 8 her significantly in the past. (Tr. at 772.) In statements dated December 27, 2011, Dr. Jain 9 indicated that Plaintiff had significant physical functional limitations, (Tr. at 815-17), and 10 had moderately severe pain sufficiently severe as to interfere with attention and concentration 11 (Tr. at 818-19).

12 In his evaluation of the objective medical evidence, the ALJ first discussed Plaintiff's 13 medical records beginning July 2010, noting that Plaintiff's sleep apnea is treated effectively 14 with CPAP and that her sleep study was determined normal. (Tr. at 32, 545-51, 559-80.) In 15 May and June 2010, it was reported that Plaintiff was very active at work, but that she had 16 poor exercise habits, (Tr. at 32, 559-80), and in July 2010, an MRI of the lumbar spine 17 showed only mild to moderate stenosis and a chest x-ray was normal in September 2010 (Tr.
18 at 32, 581-97). The ALJ found that in March 2011, decreased vision was reported and 19 assessed as mild diabetic retinopathy, but there was no treatment. (Tr. at 32, 640-47.) In 20 October 2011, Plaintiff's sleep apnea was improved and she was doing well with all issues 21 including asthma and weight loss. She was encouraged to continue exercise, diet 22 improvement, and weight loss and to follow-up in 3-4 months. (Tr. at 32, 657-77.) Knee x-
23 rays in April 2011 showed only mild degenerative joint disease of the knees and in June 2012
24 physical examination was normal. (Tr. at 32, 648-56.) In August 2011, she was walking 3-4 25 kilometers per week. (Tr. at 32, 712-17.) And, in December 2011, orthopedic surgeon notes 26 reported back pain but stable disc space narrowing and that Plaintiff was using a cane even 27 though physical examination was almost normal. (Tr. at 32, 809-14.)

1 The ALJ additionally documented that in January 2012, spinal stenosis was reported
2 in the lumbar region and a left L1-2 decompression was performed. Some bladder and bowel 3 incontinence was also reported during that time. (Tr. at 32, 834-38.) A month later Plaintiff
4 was doing “very well” and walking more than she did prior to surgery. She denied weakness, 5 radiating pain to her leg, or tingling. She reported some increased pain after a fall and was 6 referred for physical therapy and pain management, and in February 2012 it was noted her 7 pain was out of proportion to physical findings. (Tr. at 32, 820-38.)

8 The ALJ noted that in March 2012, pain management reported no side effects from 9 medications and that Plaintiff only had occasional incontinence. (Tr. at 32, 871-88.)
10 Previously, in December 2011, Plaintiff had an almost normal physical examination and was 11 instructed to exercise to improve her condition. And, in February 2012, she was reported as 12 modified independent for activities of daily living and household mobility. In March 2012, 13 rheumatoid arthritis was reported as well as carpal tunnel syndrome in the right hand. (Tr.
14 at 32, 839-70.)

15 Then, the ALJ analyzed Dr. Ottney’s assessment coupled with the opinions of state 16 agency physicians Drs. Rowse and Orienstein. (Tr. at 33, 545-51, 139-42, 150-53, 162-65, 17 175-78.) After documenting Dr. Ottney’s findings (noted above), the ALJ stated, “[t]his 18 opinion is given great weight because it is consistent with the totality of evidence. Similarly 19 with the opinions of State Agency reviewers Dr. Rowse and Dr. Orienstein in August and 20 October 2010. Ex. 5A; 7A. The record indicated the claimant’s physical impairments allow 21 her to perform work at the sedentary level with the limitations in the residual function 22 capacity assessment above.” (Tr. at 33.)

23 Next, in examining Plaintiff’s physical impairments, the ALJ discussed Dr. Jain’s 24 opinion. (Tr. at 34, 815-19, 800, 748-62.) The ALJ found that the objective evidence of 25 record does not support Dr. Jain’s opinion. (Tr. at 34.) The ALJ recited to specific instances 26 in the record finding that an October 31, 2011 MRI reported only mild disc bulging without 27 central canal spinal stenosis or neural foraminal stenosis. (Tr. at 34, 800.) Moreover, the 28 ALJ found that “it was specifically reported that the cervical spine and cord appeared stable

1 and improved since April 2011 findings and there was ‘no convincing evidence for 2 significant cord syrinx, intramedullary mass, or other abnormality.’” (Tr. at 34.) According 3 to the ALJ, Dr. Jain’s opinion was also inconsistent with Plaintiff’s physical examination 4 results in March 2011 (dated as November 2011 in the ALJ’s decision), and the ALJ also 5 stated that there is nothing in the record to support the opinion that occasional handling and 6 no fine manipulation limitations are required. (Tr. at 34, 748-62.) Lastly, the ALJ stated,

7 The opinion is also inconsistent with itself. Although it gives total 8 environmental limitations, she swims and smokes. Although it gives total 9 postural limitations, x-rays of the knee showed only mild degenerative joint 10 disease and moderate degeneration of the lumbar spine. I also note that this physician gave environmental restrictions which are in no way associated with the claimant’s alleged impairments and find that this compromised the entire report.

11 (Tr. at 34.)

12 The Court finds that the ALJ properly weighed the medical source opinion evidence 13 related to Plaintiff’s physical impairments, and gave specific and legitimate reasons, based 14 on substantial evidence in the record, for discounting Dr. Jain’s assessment. The ALJ 15 discredited the medical opinion due to multiple inconsistencies with the evidence as a whole, 16 as well as, lack of supporting clinical findings. See, e.g., Tommasetti v. Astrue, 533 F.3d 17 1035, 1041 (9th Cir. 2008) (finding the incongruity between doctor’s questionnaire responses 18 and her medical records provides a specific and legitimate reason for rejecting the opinion); 19 Connett v. Barnhart, 340 F.3d 871, 875 (9th Cir. 2003) (“We hold that the ALJ properly found 20 that [the physician’s] extensive conclusions regarding [the claimant’s] limitations are not 21 supported by his own treatment notes. Nowhere do his notes indicate reasons why [the 22 physician would limit the claimant to a particular level of exertion].”); Tonapetyan v. Halter, 23 242 F.3d 1144, 1149 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that the ALJ properly rejected a physician’s 24 testimony because “it was unsupported by rationale or treatment notes, and offered no 25 objective medical findings to support the existence of [the claimant’s] alleged conditions”).
 26 Therefore, the Court finds no error.

B. Plaintiff's Subjective Complaints

Plaintiff argues that the ALJ erred in rejecting her subjective complaints in the absence of clear and convincing reasons for doing so.

To determine whether a claimant's testimony regarding subjective pain or symptoms is credible, the ALJ must engage in a two-step analysis. "First, the ALJ must determine whether the claimant has presented objective medical evidence of an underlying impairment 'which could reasonably be expected to produce the pain or other symptoms alleged.' The claimant, however, 'need not show that her impairment could reasonably be expected to cause the severity of the symptom she has alleged; she need only show that it could reasonably have caused some degree of the symptom.'" Lingenfelter v. Astrue, 504 F.3d 1028, 1036-37 (9th Cir. 2007) (citations omitted). "Second, if the claimant meets this first test, and there is no evidence of malingering, 'the ALJ can reject the claimant's testimony about the severity of her symptoms only by offering specific, clear and convincing reasons for doing so.'" Id. at 1037 (citations omitted). General assertions that the claimant's testimony is not credible are insufficient. See Parra v. Astrue, 481 F.3d 742, 750 (9th Cir. 2007). The ALJ must identify "what testimony is not credible and what evidence undermines the claimant's complaints." Id. (quoting Lester, 81 F.3d at 834).

In weighing a claimant's credibility, the ALJ may consider many factors, including, "(1) ordinary techniques of credibility evaluation, such as the claimant's reputation for lying, prior inconsistent statements concerning the symptoms, and other testimony by the claimant that appears less than candid; (2) unexplained or inadequately explained failure to seek treatment or to follow a prescribed course of treatment; and (3) the claimant's daily activities." Smolen v. Chater, 80 F.3d 1273, 1284 (9th Cir. 1996); see Orn, 495 F.3d at 637-39.² The ALJ also considers "the claimant's work record and observations of treating and

² With respect to the claimant's daily activities, the ALJ may reject a claimant's symptom testimony if the claimant is able to spend a substantial part of her day performing household chores or other activities that are transferable to a work setting. See Fair, 885 F.2d at 603. The Social Security Act, however, does not require that claimants be utterly incapacitated to be eligible for benefits, and many home activities may not be easily

1 examining physicians and other third parties regarding, among other matters, the nature, 2 onset, duration, and frequency of the claimant's symptom; precipitating and aggravating
3 factors; [and] functional restrictions caused by the symptoms" Smolen, 80 F.3d at 1284 4 (citation omitted).

5 At Plaintiff's hearing on November 16, 2011, Plaintiff testified that her primary 6 disorder causing inability to work was a back disorder causing pain for which she took oral 7 medication that was somewhat effective, used a transcutaneous electrical nerve stimulator 8 (TENS) unit, had undergone spinal medication injections, and used an unprescribed cane or 9 (currently) a walker to ambulate. (Tr. at 56-58, 62-68, 71-72, 84, 87.) She also testified that 10 she had bilateral upper extremity disorders causing numbness and pain, (Tr. at 59, 68);
11 bilateral knee disorders status post right knee surgery, (Tr. at 56-57, 61-62, 75-76); a history 12 of a pulmonary embolism for which she had taken anticoagulant medication but was no 13 longer taking such, (Tr. at 74); asthma causing shortness of breath treated with medication, 14 including using an inhaler and a nebulizer, and did not very often cause inability to "get air," 15 (Tr. at 69-71, 74-75); and sleep apnea for which she used CPAP device, (Tr. at 60). She 16 further testified that she performed limited household chores with effort. (Tr. at 77-78.)

17 At the second hearing held on March 27, 2012, Plaintiff testified that she had 18 undergone lumbar spine surgery with residual bowel/bladder difficulty that was not being 19 treated, pain, and balance difficulty, and that she used a cane or a walker to ambulate. (Tr.
20 at 100-05, 111-13.) She also testified that she had right carpal tunnel syndrome causing grip 21 difficulty but not preventing lifting small things, for which she was not being treated other 22 than with medication for pain. (Tr. at 106-07, 113, 115.)

23 Having reviewed the record along with the ALJ's credibility analysis, the Court finds 24 that the ALJ made sufficient credibility findings and identified several clear and convincing 25 reasons supported by the record for discounting Plaintiff's statements regarding her pain and 26 limitations. Although the ALJ recognized that Plaintiff's medically determinable

27 _____
28 transferable to a work environment where it might be impossible to rest periodically or take medication. See id.

1 impairments could reasonably be expected to cause the alleged symptoms, he also found that 2 Plaintiff's statements concerning the intensity, persistence, and limiting effects of the 3 symptoms were not fully credible. (Tr. at 27-31.)

4 In his evaluation of Plaintiff's credibility, the ALJ first referenced the objective 5 medical evidence (noted above) stating specifically, "[t]he credibility of the claimant's 6 allegations regarding the severity of her symptoms and limitations is diminished because 7 those allegations are greater than expected in light of the objective evidence of record. The 8 medical evidence indicates the claimant received routine conservative treatment for her 9 impairments. The positive objective clinical and diagnostic findings since the alleged onset 10 date ... do not support more restrictive functional limitations than those assessed herein." (Tr.
11 at 31-32.) Further, citing to the record, the ALJ found that in February 2012, one of 12 Plaintiff's treating physicians noted that Plaintiff's pain was "out of proportion to the 13 physical findings (Exhibit 30F)," and another treating physician indicated that in March 14 2012, that Plaintiff was not experiencing any side effects from her medications (Exhibit 15 33F)." (Tr. at 31); see Carmickle, 533 F.3d at 1161 ("Contradiction with the medical record 16 is a sufficient basis for rejecting the claimant's subjective testimony.") (citation omitted); 17 Batson v. Comm'r of Social Security, 359 F.3d 1190, 1197 (9th Cir. 2004) (lack of objective 18 medical evidence supporting claimant's allegations supported ALJ's finding that claimant 19 was not credible); Johnson v. Shalala, 60 F.3d 1428, 1434 (9th Cir. 1995) (evidence of 20 "conservative treatment" is sufficient to discount a claimant's testimony regarding severity 21 of an impairment).

22 The ALJ additionally analyzed Plaintiff's "somewhat normal level" of daily activities
23 and interaction finding that said activities also reduced Plaintiff's credibility. (Tr. at 31-32.)
24 "[I]f the claimant engages in numerous daily activities involving skills that could be 25 transferred to the workplace, an adjudicator may discredit the claimant's allegations upon 26 making specific findings relating to the claimant's daily activities." Bunnell v. Sullivan, 947 27 F.2d 341, 346 (9th Cir. 1991) (citing Fair, 885 F.2d at 603); see Berry v. Astrue, 622 F.3d 28

1 1228, 1234-35 (9th Cir. 2010) (claimant's activities suggested a greater functional capacity
2 than alleged). The ALJ stated:

3 The claimant admitted activities of daily living including walking up to a mile, 4 taking her kids to the pool, cooking, using the computer, and visiting her sister 5 daily. Ex. 7F. Some of the physical and mental abilities and social 6 interactions required in order to perform these activities are the same as those 7 necessary for obtaining and maintaining employment. The claimant's ability 8 to participate in such activities undermined the credibility of the claimant's allegations of disabling functional limitations. Even if the claimant's daily activities are truly as limited as alleged, it is difficult to attribute that degree of limitation to the claimant's medical condition, as opposed to other reasons, in view of the relatively benign medical evidence and other factors discussed in this decision. ...

9 (Tr. at 31.) While not alone conclusive on the issue of disability, an ALJ can reasonably 10 consider a claimant's daily activities in evaluating the credibility of his subjective 11 complaints. See, e.g., Stubbs-Danielson v. Astrue, 539 F.3d 1169, 1175 (9th Cir. 2008)
12 (upholding ALJ's credibility determination based in part of the claimant's abilities to cook, 13 clean, do laundry, and help her husband with the finances); Burch v. Barnhart, 400 F.3d 676, 14 680-81 (9th Cir. 2005) (upholding ALJ's credibility determination based in part on the 15 claimant's abilities to cook, clean, shop, and handle finances).

16 Lastly, the ALJ found that Plaintiff's credibility was diminished by the fact that she 17 was terminated from her last job – and did not have to stop working due to her impairments.
18 He also noted various inconsistencies in the record finding that Plaintiff made several 19 misrepresentations to consultative examiners. (Tr. at 32.)

20 In summary, the Court finds that the ALJ provided a sufficient basis to find Plaintiff's 21 allegations not entirely credible. While perhaps the individual factors, viewed in isolation, 22 are not sufficient to uphold the ALJ's decision to discredit Plaintiff's allegations, each factor 23 is relevant to the ALJ's overall analysis, and it was the cumulative effect of all the factors 24 that led to the ALJ's decision. The Court concludes that the ALJ has supported his decision 25 to discredit Plaintiff's allegations with specific, clear and convincing reasons and, therefore, 26 the Court finds no error.

1 V. CONCLUSION

2 Substantial evidence supports the ALJ's decision to deny Plaintiff's claim for 3 disability insurance benefits and supplemental security income in this case. Consequently, 4 the ALJ's decision is affirmed.

5 Based upon the foregoing discussion,

6 IT IS ORDERED that the decision of the ALJ and the Commissioner of Social 7 Security be affirmed;

8 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of the Court shall enter judgment 9 accordingly. The judgment will serve as the mandate of this Court.

10 DATED this 27th day of January, 2015.
